As the population ages and medical treatment becomes increasingly complex, the individuals presenting to dentists will become more challenging to provide with oral health care.

The world also continues to evolve and personal habits, including recreational drug use, may effect dental treatment. We will explore how personal choice may affect oral health.

The dentist is central in the delivery of care to patients with mucosal disease. It is well recognised that dental health and cleansing can affect the presentation of several oral diseases and that the same diseases complicate the provision of dental treatment. Can implants be provided to patients with mucosal disease for example? Suggestions will be made for recall times for specific oral conditions and barriers to treatment.

The referral of patients can impact on treatment outcomes. When should patients be referred and what details are essential for consultants to triage letters in secondary care?

The sessions will be interactive and practitioners invited to provide their own examples of difficult patients they treat in practice. We will explore treatment options for patients initiated in practice and more importantly, when not to intervene.

Topics to be covered are:

1. Review the impact of the drug history (including over the counter and recreational drugs) on orofacial disease presentation and dental treatment.
2. Consider the role of the dentist and hygienist in the management of dry mouth.
3. To discuss the shared care of individuals with oral mucosal diseases between specialist and general practice. An evidence based practical approach to dental care.
4. To discuss the characteristics of a high quality referral letter from primary and secondary care and what to expect in the letter back.
