Persistent apical periodontitis (PAP) after endodontic treatment affects over 30% of root-filled teeth, so we encounter it daily in our practices. Recent surveys indicate that for management of root-filled teeth with PAP, dentists increasingly favor replacement with implant-supported crowns over endodontic management believing implants have a better prognosis.Contrary to these perceptions, the current best evidence, supporting a good prognosis for endodontic treatment, suggests that favoring replacement of the teeth with implants is unjustifiable. This comprehensive full-day lecture program will address the treatment vs replacement dilemma and highlight pertinent considerations for retreatment, apical surgery and intentional replantation.

Topics to be covered will include:

Retreatment, in the era of implants?!
This lecture will highlight key concepts for avoiding unwarranted extraction of root-filled teeth with PAP.

What is the long-term prognosis of apical microsurgery?
The limitations of apical surgery will be explained and contemporary approaches highlighted that can improve the effectiveness of the surgical management of PAP.

Retreatment or apical surgery?
This lecture will review the rationale of management based on the etiology of the disease and outline practical case selection criteria for when to perform retreatment or surgery.

Can replantation and transplantation trump implants?
Intentional replantation and transplantation will be highlighted as predictable approaches offering good chances to retain "untreatable" teeth for patients' benefit.

Course objectives:

- Understand the key concepts for supporting endodontic management vs replacement of teeth with PAP.
- Gain insight into contemporary techniques and long-term outcomes of Retreatment, Apical Microsurgery, Intentional Replantation and Autogenous Transplantation.
- Learn the rationale for selecting between the various management options for teeth with PAP.
